Write an introduction to an informative and factual blog post titled "Expectations". What are expectations? These are your hopes for what will happen in the future - how happy you feel about something now has everything to do with what happens next. Research what happens to expectations in the future for other people. How do your friends, relatives, or even strangers respond to these expectations? Are their responses positive or negative? How did the results of the experiment affect them? Take a picture of your child's reaction after reading "Expecting Toddlers" by Vicky Moore. Are you a parent? Do you have a child? If so, chances are that you've read this book. It's not far-fetched to say that children grow up in a hurry and according to their age, they will be exposed to different cultures and beliefs. For instance, toddlers can be exposed to religions such as Baha'i faith or even Catholicism while their young minds develop like other people's. They've seen empires rise, fall, and even disappear into time itself. You would want to know what happened in the past - you would want to learn about historical events that shaped our world today. Maybe they fought for their country in war; maybe they fell in love with someone who was forbidden to them; or maybe they were caught up in political events like Hitler's rise to power or the rise of communism. Whatever it was, these are the stories that make history. Write an introduction to an informative and factual blog post titled "Rise of the Apes". Even though it's true that they don't have much need for socializing, there is still something special about them. Chimpanzees are curious animals who are interested in finding out how things work around them - they may even try to understand why things happen the way they do.
